General Terms

Ice Cream

American Ice Cream has more milk and less cream than most French and Italian ice creams and except for frozen custard, is usually made without eggs. Besides milk (fresh, condensed or dry) and cream, commercial American ice cream contains sugar, plus flavorings, stabilizers and plenty of air. Most ice cream types should be at least 5% air or they'll be rock hard. The government allows air to constitute up to 50% of ice cream's total volume.

Frozen Custard

Ice cream made with an egg custard base (at least 1.4% egg yolks), which gives the dessert body and silkiness. Must contain a minimum of 10% milk fat and weigh not less than 4.5 pounds per gallon

Milk Shake

A blended and sometimes sweetened beverage made from fresh fruit (fruit smoothie) and in special cases can contain chocolate or peanut butter. In addition to fruit, many smoothies include crushed ice, frozen fruit, honey or contain syrup and ice ingredients.

Frozen Yogurt

A mostly commercial product, containing basically the same ingredients as ice cream but with yogurt added and a lower percentage of butterfat.

Sorbet

Also known in the United States as water ice, sorbet ins made without any dairy products whatsoever, though egg whites are sometimes incorporated to give it body.

Smoothie

A blended and sometimes sweetened beverage made from fresh fruit (fruit smoothie) and in special cases can contain chocolate or peanut butter. In addition to fruit, many smoothies include crushed ice, frozen fruit, honey or contain syrup and ice ingredients.

Slush

A Icy Freeze made with neutral slush base (sweetened or unsweetened and an added varieties of flavors.
